Suicide Prevention Training and Readiness for Schools (STARS)

Train the Trainer Opportunity

We are looking for professionals across North Dakota who want to help schools support student safety and mental well-being.

You already care about the young people in your community. Become a STARS All-Staff Trainer and help schools create safer, more supportive environments for students.

The STARS All-Staff Training is a 1.5 to 2-hour training for teachers and other non-clinical school staff.

To become a trainer, you will complete the STARS Train-the-Trainer program. This includes 1-2 hours of self-paced study, an 8-hour classroom training and required observations.

By becoming a STARS All-Staff Trainer, you can bring important training to schools in your community.

Training dates will be scheduled according to the needs and availability of trainers and trainees.

The University of North Dakota and NORC at the University of Chicago partnered to bring the STARS Program to North Dakota schools.

The STARS Program is the first multi-component school substance use and suicide prevention training program for North Dakota and is modeled on existing evidenced-based trainings and practices.
